NO. 10-19817

TSAI LAW COMPANY'S REPLY IN SUPPORT OF APPLICATION FOR DISBURSEMENT OF APPROVED FEES AND EXPENSES

12 Upon review of the Declaration of Ronald G. Brown in Support of Trustee's Objection
13 (Document 325), it appears that almost the entirety of the debtor's estate as currently reported in 14 this matter were monies paid to debtor's attorney for representation in the bankruptcy and his 15 dissolution. Little if any property that was not earmarked for payment of debtor's prior legal 16 expenses has been recovered. Yet the trustee continues to investigate the existence of assets
17 (Tanager Fund/Terington Davies investment accounts) that were valued at zero by the state court
18 in debtor's dissolution, and continues to charge the estate for work that was already done in state
19 court by Tsai Law Company. The investigation has turned up no new assets, and no benefit has 20 been received by the estate. While the trustee's argument is correct that bankruptcy professionals
21 accept interim compensation at their peril, Tsai Law Company represents almost exclusively 22 individuals in state court dissolution proceedings, and they performed their duties as such. They 23 would not have sought appointment as Special Counsel for debtor had they been aware that even after appointment by the Court and approval of their fees and costs, the trustee would attempt to strip every dime paid to them (including sums already paid to court reporters and experts) and subject them to extended litigation rivaling debtor's dissolution.

Regarding claim priority, Tsai Law Company has a priority administrative claim in the Chapter 11 proceeding. They are not pro rata with the claim of Lyman Opie as to the $20,000. As was argued in response to the turnover motion, Mr. Opie's claim is not supported by the documentation he offers in support (Exhibit 1), specifically that the $135,000 note was already in default at the time Mr. Opie claims he advanced the $20,000 to debtor as part of the future advance clause in the note. Without a new note or written extension of the May 25, 2010 note, there is no written proof that the money was loaned. And as has been argued, nothing in Mr. Opie's communication with Tsai Law Company indicated he was loaning the money to debtor. If he had, Tsai Law Company would never have agreed to represent the debtor, thereby sparing themselves having to represent the debtor in a contentious divorce, which has been followed by a contentious bankruptcy. The Opie claim is therefore not entitled to administrative priority, and in fact the $20,000 portion of the claim should be objected to as a general unsecured claim for lack of proof.
